

linen are already sufficiently well known not to require any commendation at our hands. Very pretty articles are the ladies' silver flax handkerchief and the ladies' finely-corded and stitched mull handkerchief, and the printed mull handkerchiefs for girls and boys. We strongly recommend all our readers, before purchasing handkerchiefs elsewhere, to send for specimens of Messrs. Robinson and Cleaver's. They send a very liberal supply, inclusive of almost every price and quality. The same firm issue a full and complete price list of handkerchiefs—Irish damask and damask linen; household linen, sheeting, &c.; longcloths, muslins, &c.; ladies' gowns, corsets, skirts, and dressing-gowns; children's underclothing, baby linen, &c. Hosiery and gloves have a list to themselves. Children's hosiery and sleeping-gowns are a special feature. A price list also is supplied of ladies', gentlemen's, boys', and girls' collars and cuffs, &c., neatly illustrated, giving the exact pattern. There is also a complete price list of embroideries, a list of umbrellas, and also one of the latest novelties in curtains; a price list of haberdashery, trimmings, and fancy goods, and one of Shetland wool and silk shawls, another of Irish lace goods, and one of Irish tweeds, serges, and cloths. The same firm also make a pretty turn-down collar, which is known to many of our readers, and is called the "Sister Eva." This is of excellent quality (and moderate in price), with cuffs to match. Also a special line is a Nursing apron, well made, broad shoulder-bands, hemmed, stitched, and with a very useful pocket. This is made of good material, and is exactly what is required for Institutions and private work. Altogether, we have to congratulate Messrs. Robinson and Cleaver upon the enterprise they display in always taking the lead by the introduction of novelties of various kinds.

THOSE of our readers who wish to purchase for their friends a suitable Christmas present, there is hardly anything more apropos than a pair of Ross's opera glasses, which may be had in thoroughly reliable quality at twenty-five shillings and upwards, from the makers, Messrs. Ross and Co., 112, New Bond Street, W., who also have a very large assortment of spectacles and eye-glasses to suit every form of defective vision, information which will be valued by those who may unfortunately require such articles.
