

A FIRELIGHTING DISINFECTANT.

[FULMEN'S FIRELIGHTER COMPANY, 8B, Romford Place, Liverpool.]

The epidemics that overtake us from time to time, make us look round for all those small details, that help to keep our homes fresh, sweet, and disinfected. To this end we draw our readers' attention to the "Fulmen's Firelighter." This practical and decidedly useful little invention has a unique and appreciable merit. It is a disinfectant and deodorizer, and, while burning in a room, it not only counteracts noxious smells, but gives off a most agreeable and refreshing odour, added to which it is possible to make or revive a fire in a very few minutes, which is of the utmost consideration in the sick-room. They are light in weight, portable, cleanly, and cheap. These firelighters are principally made of cork and resin, and we are told, in an old fable, that the burning of cork had the credit for keeping a certain town free from an epidemic whilst it was raging all around. If this, then, be the case, we have the advantage of modern improvements based on an already recognized foundation, and when the germs of fever, cholera, and the like impregnate the air, we cannot be too careful in keeping our rooms fresh and well disinfected.

Another advantage of these lighters is that they have been found to destroy slugs when used for disinfecting cellars. Any of our readers wishing to put them to a practical test should write for free samples.

PERSIAN BOUQUET PERFUME AND SOAP.

(MR. E. PEARSON, Nottingham.)

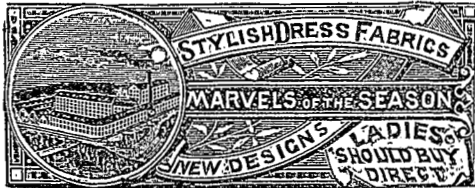

A practical test of these goods only prove that they have to be added to the already long list of useful preparations made and "put up" by this manufacturer. Of the many perfumes we find in the list, we believe this to be the favoured one on account of its extreme delicacy, while the soap that shares its name can also boast the same popularity.

CARBOLINE DENTIFRICE AND TOOTHBRUSH.

(Mr. PEARSON, 9, Market Street, Nottingham.)

Sprinkling a few drops of Duncan's Carboline on the toothbrush, and applying it to the teeth every morning, will be found to cleanse them readily and effectually, besides materially assisting in their preservation; it is decidedly refreshing and agree-
