The Passing Bell.

The death has just been announced of Nurse Millar, the pioneer nurse of the Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor, 3, College Square North, Belfast, when it was inaugurated by the late Miss Macpherson, thirty-one years ago. For several years Nurse Millar has been in the receipt of a small pension from the superannuation fund, which she had thoroughly merited by her long and devoted service.

The nurses of the Society have attended 931 cases during the past year, and have brought great comfort and relief to many homes where the patients are greatly relieved by their ministrations. Perhaps in no branch of nursing do nurses so speedily see the effects of their work as do those engaged in the care of the sick poor in their own homes.
