

tributing £156, an excellent result of much work done by willing hands. The convener of the stall was the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. Baird, who was the holder, in conjunction with the Matron, Miss Day. They were assisted by the nurses and others. The net result of the bazaar will provide a substantial sum for investment, and we do not doubt that eventually sufficient will be raised for the purpose required. The picture which we present on this page is that of the hospital. The pavilion itself is a charming building, and in the splendid air of Bonnie Scotland, and with good nursing care, the patients will assuredly be placed in surroundings and conditions which will afford them an excellent hope of recovery.

Those nurses who were interested in the reviews of Dr. Anna Hamilton's Thesis, "Considerations sur les Infirmières des Hôpitaux," will hear with pleasure that an edition is to be published in English, a pupil of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, having been public-spirited enough to undertake both the translation and the responsibility of publication. It will be remembered that Dr. Hamilton chose this subject for the Thesis required of those who take the degree of M.D. by the Faculty of Medicine at Montpellier, and that she presented an able and exhaustive review of the subject, much to the surprise of some who thought there was nothing to be said upon it! We shall look forward to and welcome the English edition.

In this country we are apt to think that in the present century things are humming along at top speed, but in the New World they have evidently beaten the record. Miss L. L. Dock, who on her return to New York settled down to work in the Nurses' Settlement, in Henry Street, writes:—"I am so snowed under for the summer that I almost don't know where I am at, as the darkies say. One of our nurses who has always managed our summer home for mothers and children was unexpectedly taken ill and had to leave, and in a day I was translated from New York out here in the wilds of the country, mail only once a day, forty-five guests, mothers with babes of every age, whooping boys of twelve, and lots of little girls. We are all on such a continuous gallop that I seem like someone else, and wonder if I was ever abroad or did anything but shovel food down ravenous throats and order p.r.n. from butcher and baker. . . . I assure you after the peace and leisure of the Old World that it seems to me here as if everyone was being shot out of steam propellers, and New York appears like one large lunatic asylum full of furious maniacs."

We feel sure that by this time Miss Dock has found out "where she is at," and is grappling with the situation with a charming mixture of absorption, capacity, and humour. We wish we could drop in upon her for a chat, over a cup of "English tea."

A recent wedding is that of Miss

A. E. Newport to Mr. R. J. Proctor. The bride is well known in nursing circles, having had a varied experience. She was trained at the London Hospital, and has held the positions of Head Nurse at Kendal Hospital, Sister at the West London Hospital, Hammersmith, and Matron of the Smallwood Hospital, Redditch. In 1897 she became a member of the Registered Nurses' Society, on the staff of which she worked for some years. Recently she has devoted herself to massage, being a certified masseuse. We wish her happiness in her new life, which will still be spent in London. We have no doubt many of her friends add their congratulations to our own.
