

North of London, and has accommodation for 159 patients. The circular wards are a feature, which the hospital shares with the New Hospital for Women, Euston Road, the Miller Memorial Hospital, Greenwich, the Camberwell Infirmary, and the Nottingham General Hospital. Very charming they are, and it is somewhat remarkable that this form of ward is not more often adopted, for it is commented on in most favourable terms in the institutions where it is found. The hospital, of course, is a training-school for probationers, and affords excellent experience. The staff at present consists, besides the Matron, of an Assistant Matron, nine Sisters, and over thirty nurses and probationers, but we understand that as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made as to accommodation the staff is to be considerably augmented. Since Miss Pearse came into office it has been arranged for the Sisters and nurses to take their meals at different hours. The Sisters' breakfast is later than the nurses', and they have a cold lunch and dinner at 7 p.m. We wish all success to the new Matron, and do not doubt that under her guidance the school will maintain and increase its reputation and popularity.

A large number of competitors substituted "Robb's Biscuits" for "Robb's Food"—a natural mistake to make, as the former are a sort of national institution.

One competitor who sent correct replies omitted to sign her name.

The Sister of the Coldstream Guards.

Last week was buried, at Clewer, near Windsor with military honours, Sister Georgina, who for forty years has been a member of the Clewer Sisterhood, devoting her life and fortune to the poor and needy. She worked incessantly for the private soldier and his wife and family, and received in return their sincere affection. She was Chivalric Visiting Sister to the Brigade of Foot Guards in London, and it was by sergeants of the Coldstream Guards that she was carried to her last resting place at the Clewer Cemetery. The Brigade of Foot Guards sent a beautiful wreath, on which was the inscription "At rest." Lord Methuen was present at the graveside.
