

Nurses of Note.

MISS AMY HUGHES,

We are always gratified when a woman receives official recognition of her work, and last week we had the pleasure to announce that with the consent of Her Majesty the Queen, the Gold Badge of Queen Victoria's Jubilee Institute for Nurses had been conferred on Miss Amy Hughes, in recognition of the valuable to her prominent and honourable post as General Superintendent of Queen Victoria's Jubilee Institute for Nurses.

Miss Hughes realises the fact that the modern Nurse, especially in the district, must qualify as a social reform worker, so intimately are her duties bound up with the moral and physical health of the community. She is also a keen Registrationist, and gave very valuable evidence before the Select Committee on Registration in services she has rendered to the cause of district nursing, and the care of the poor in their own homes.

Trained at St. Thomas's Hospital, London, and under the Metropolitan & National Nursing Association, Miss Hughes has had a varied and distinguished nursing career. She has in turn been Superintendent of a Poor-Law Infirmary, the Nurses' Co-Operation, London, and of County Nursing Associations, before promotion favour of organised standards and legal status for Nurses, and she has attended and taken part in several International Conferences on Nursing. The portrait which we have the pleasure of presenting and which is such an excellent likeness, was specially taken for the Queen's Nurses' Magazine, to whose courteous editor we are indebted for permission to reproduce it. Miss Hughes is wearing the Badge of the Institute.
