An interesting feature in the Hospital Sunday Fund awards this year is that 26 nursing associations have received gifts. Incidentally this calls attention to the great development of nursing since the foundation of the fund in 1873. At that time the Queen's Jubilee Institute, whose nurses now do good work throughout the length and breadth of the land was not founded the Royal Naval and the Indian Nursing Services were non-existent. The Colonial Nursing Association had not been thought of, and nursing schools were for the most part unorganised. Now throughout the land, in the homes of rich and poor, the trained nurse is indispensable in time of sickness.

Miss Katherine H. Monk, late Sister Matron of King's College Hospital, has been presented with a purse of money subscribed by over 500 of her personal friends, past and present members of the Committee and of the Medical and Nursing Staff of King's College Hospital, together with a book containing an address and the names of the subscribers. The presentation was made by Lord Methuen, Chairman of the Committee of Management, who, with a small deputation, visited Miss Monk at her house in Brighton for the purpose.

Under the will of the late Duke of Rutland Nurse F. Pipe, a member of the staff of St. John's House, Norfolk Street, Strand, who for some years had been employed by the Duke, receives a legacy of £100. Members of the League of St. John's House Nurses, and her other friends in the nursing world will congratulate Nurse Pipe on her well-merited good fortune.

We hope as time goes on the men who insist upon managing nursing societies will see the injustice of using the money earned by private duty nurses for the upkeep of the charity district nursing of the poor. This is being
