SUPERINTENDENT OF NURSES.

Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, U.S.A.—Miss G. C. Ross, who has so long filled the office of Assistant at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, has been offered, and has accepted, the position of Acting Superintendent of Nurses for the coming year. The vacancy is, of course, caused by the resignation of Miss M. A. Nutting, who gives up the office which she has held with such distinction, in order to assume the duties of the Professorship at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York, to which she has been appointed. Miss Ross is a graduate of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, and after holding the position of Head Nurse in various wards entered the office of the Superintendent of Nurses, where she has since remained. The Johns Hopkins Nurses' Alumnae Magazine says: "Her long experience in this important office has made her familiar with every phase and every detail of the work of the Hospital and Training School in their various departments, and her own ability, good sense, untiring energy, and conspicuous devotion and loyalty to the interests of the Institution have combined to place her among its most valuable officers, and to win for her the respect, confidence, and appreciation of all those who have been associated with her. Everyone will feel that the work is in good and safe hands, that affairs will be handled with wisdom, justice, and the highest integrity, and that in offering Miss Ross this appointment the Trustees have paid a well deserved tribute to her many years of fine and faithful service."
