

Nursing Echoes.

Miss Florence Nightingale has presented in equal proportions to Queen Victoria's Institute for Nurses and the Hospital for Invalid Gentlewomen, Harley Street, the 100 gs. received by her from the City of London in lieu of a gold casket to contain the freedom of the City. Miss Nightingale was the first Superintendent of the Hospital for Gentlewomen, and it was thence that she went to the hospitals at Scutari.

It has been a long promise that the Queen

cal officer at the hospital, Major Symons, secretary and registrar, Miss Keer, Matron-in-Chief at the War Office, and Miss McCarthy, Matron of the hospital.

After visiting several wards, the Royal visitors passed on to the Nurses' Home, where all the Sisters in their charming uniform lined the hall. Every part of these new premises was inspected. The visitors went to the "sick sisters'" department at the top of the building, and also into the bedrooms. On reaching the hall at the close of their inspection, the Queen, Empress, and Princess declared them-would open the beautiful new Nurses' Home connected with the Royal Military Hospital at Millbank, and on Friday last her Majesty, with the Empress Marie and Princess Victoria, drove down to the hospital about 4 o'clock, and were received at the main entrance by Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., Sir Frederick Treves, Sir Alfred Keogh, Director-General of the Army Medical Service, Colonel C. E. Harrison, commanding and senior medical officer at the hospital, Major Symons, secretary and registrar, Miss Keer, Matron-in-Chief at the War Office, and Miss McCarthy, Matron of the hospital.

As this was the informal opening of the home, a new visitors' book was produced, in which the Royal signatures were written.

At the Annual Meeting of the East London Nursing Association held at the Mansion House last week, the Lord Mayor drew attention to the new arrangement made by the Society with the Jewish Board of Guardians,
