"HAPPY THOUGH WOUNDED."

The Gazette of the 3rd London General Hospital, Wandsworth, has become quite a feature in war literature, and the issue of "Happy though volume, worth much more than the modest half-a-crown the public are charged for it.

The Matron, Miss Holden, has, so to say, "found her pen" since the war, in spite of her multitudinous duties, about which she tells in "My Day." Miss H. M. Nightingale, a "V.A.D.," is justly considered the

THE DRIVE IN SUMMER.

Wounded," a magazine full of interesting and amusing articles and illustrations culled from The Gazette, should bring in a very handsome sum in support of the Benevolent Fund of the hospital, and therefore directly increase the comfort and happiness of the wounded. The "Dedication" "To our Friends in Khaki and Blue who have passed through the wards of the 3rd London . . . in admiration of their cheerfulness when sick and wounded," has now become characteristic of British wounded, and is one of the most cheering facts of this terrible war. It is quite amazing how much artistic talent appears to have gravitated to this hospital. Grave, pathetic, gay and witty articles follow one another, and we are told that the "whole of 'Happy though Wounded' from within; every single article, story, poem and drawing was done either by a patient, or by a member of the staff,"and both the Editor, Lance-Corporal Ward Muir, R.A.M.C., and the Art Editor, Sergeant Noël Irving, R.A.M.C. (T.) are to be congratulated on the expert manner in which they have brought out this splendid Day." Miss H. M. Nightingale, a "V.A.D.," is justly considered the chief pillar of the Poets' Corner, and her "Gallipoli" is just one of those things which those of us who are compiling a little book of "war verses" will hasten to copy into it. "Songbirds of France," a Rondeau, written while waiting at a point behind the trenches by the late Captain Stedman, who made the "supreme sacrifice," must not be omitted. There are many delightful skits on various "personages," but the little silhouettes of Sisters and nurses by Miss Marjory C. Collins are quite charming.

To thoroughly enjoy "Happy though Wounded" you must buy it, you will then realise the pleasure of contributing to the very good cause for which so much talent has been expended. It is just the sort of magazine appreciated at the front. We hope many copies will find their way there.

THE DRIVE IN WINTER.

The two charming pictures of sisters and nurses in the drive of the 3rd London General Hospital, in summer and winter, are reproduced by the kind permission of the Editor of The Gazette.

previous page next page