NURSING AND THE WAR.
A Sister writes:

Dear Editor,—I am writing to you as I know the Nursing profession have a great supporter in you. The Sisters and Staff Nurses of Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service Reserve are being demobilised at forty-eight hours' notice, and after that time all their pay and allowances cease. It is true they will be paid their gratuity —Sisters, £10, and Staff Nurses, £7 10s. for every complete year of service, if their reports are satisfactory. Do you consider this a fair treatment? What about the people who have no homes, and are entirely dependent upon their earnings. How are they to live until they find suitable employment? Are the Sisters who have served for three or four years fit to go without any rest and continue to work? Perhaps you can do something for us. I don't want you to publish my name as I have not yet been demobilised, and if they find me making a fuss they may not give me my gratuity, and I cannot afford to lose that."

We disapprove of summary demobilisation at a few hours' notice. Each Sister and Staff Nurse after three or four years' service should be given full emoluments for a month's holiday, the shortest time needful, after the strain of active service, in which to recuperate, as it is not until nurses are demobilised that they realise how tired and often "nerve" they are.

We should like suggestions from several Reserve Sisters and Nurses of what they would consider just treatment. The present Secretary of State for War conceded huge bonuses to the "industrial" army who helped to win the War. It might be well to test his sympathy with the "humanitarian" wing. As through the publicity given by The British Journal of Nursing to the disgraceful "Serf Clause," Sisters and Nurses have now an appeal to the Secretary of State for War—why not ask that a Deputation of Reserve Sisters and Nurses should be received at the War Office to talk the question over with Mr. Winston Churchill? Miss Jentie Paterson could put the matter before him with very convincing force!
