

advertisements in the Queen are a feast of ever-new fascination. Bending over the list of desirable articles, she makes imaginary purchases of dread-nought serge, lace, six-button tans, and natty little bonnets, yards of fur, and ward-shoes that will wear. She is quite happy laying in a fanciful stock of these treasures, without money and without price.

Then the woman who is a devotee of Browning, and delights in the "Ring and the Book" will not be expected to satisfy herself with a volume of Tit-Bits or Queechy.

The admirers of Donovan and Zoroaster will have their tastes considered, and the "all-round" readers who devour everything will be satisfied with the provision made.

Sometimes Nurses off duty are too tired to read, yet they like to turn over the leaves of some current illustrated paper as they rest. They want to be amused without fatigue.

To some people, magazines afford the one kind of reading they care for or attempt. That little Hospital was wise in its generation, which, finding funds allowed but small margin for variety, bought a few good reference books and a popular encyclopædia, subscribed to a circulating library, Punch, the Daily Graphic, and the NURSING RECORD.
