

Nursing Echoes.

THIS ILLUSTRATION of the Florence Nightingale Statuette, this time of the original wax model, is appearing in these columns yet again because when it peeped from the pages of the October, 1951, issue of this

South Street, Park Lane, London, the new occupier, possessing a handsome French bedstead provided with the customary niche for the statue of a favourite Saint, meditated—to what better use could this small space be devoted than to the British heroine?

So, in 1912, the original bronze statuette was created

Wax Model of Florence Nightingale. G. Knoblock, 1912.

Journal, it aroused a good deal of interest on both sides of the wide Atlantic.

What was its origin, how came it to be executed?

We are very happy to pass on this knowledge to our readers.

After the death of Florence Nightingale at No. 10

by Miss Gertrude Knoblock, who added one more memento of the pioneer of modern nursing to posterity.

The plaster statuette, together with the very precious first wax model donated by the Sculptress, are to be found in the History of Nursing Collection of the British College of Nurses, Ltd.

previous page

next page