Editorial.

NO NURSES ADMITTED.

N another column, will be found a letter from a correspondent which will arouse the greatest surprise, and no inconsiderable indignation, amongst members of the Nursing profession. The incident related might well have occurred to some Nurse less able to resent it than our correspondent is. She is an enthusiastic member of the profession, and is one of the increasing number in our ranks who follow the occupation from love of the work and not from any necessity of earning her livelihood thereby. Her father is a gentleman of considerable position, and greatly respected by a large circle of persons acquainted with his public and private work. We are informed by our correspondent, to whom we have applied for further particulars beyond those given in her communication, that the incident referred to took place at a London Hotel. It raises a question of the greatest importance both to the Nursing profession and to the public. We are well aware that at some few private hotels the proprietors are compelled to make a special request to Nurses employed in attendance upon visitors, not to appear in their uniform, inasmuch as they do not desire it to be known that any case of illness is present in their restricted establishments. The managers of most of the larger hotels regard this as an unnecessary precaution, seeing that it is well known that large numbers of people come to London, and to other large towns, for medical treatment, that they carry out such treatment in hotels, and previous page next page
