THE NURSING CONFERENCE.

SOME months ago, we announced that a Conference would be held during, and in connection with, the Nursing Exhibition, for the purpose of discussing important Nursing subjects; and, as our readers will observe, from the programme which is published in another column, this Conference will take place, next week.

It is of obvious importance to the Nursing profession that its members should be able to thoroughly debate matters which are of vital importance to its well-being, and it must be a subject of sincere congratulation that there are, in our midst, women who are able to explain with clearness and knowledge crucial questions concerning their respective branches of work. The Conference could have been extended to much greater length had it been possible to make the necessary arrangements or provide the necessary time; but the selection which has been made from the papers which have been offered is as complete as time would allow. They will be found to be of interest and importance, and it is to be hoped that the discussions which they elicit will still further enhance their value.
