

The Hutchinson Nursing Home, Cairo.

Every year Cairo becomes more popular as a winter health resort, and indeed its attractions for those who can afford to winter abroad are many. The delightful, invigorating air, the proximity of the desert with a fascination all its own, the wonders of the Nile, the interest of which is Miss L. C. Carruthers, who was trained at St. George's Hospital, London. The Home offers accommodation, not only to those who require the skilled medical and nursing care ordinarily to be found in such an institution, but also to those who, though not really ill, shrink from the noise and bustle inseparable from a large hotel. To such the Home affords the comfort and quiet of a private house. At the same time, as it is situated in the Ismailieh of its bazaars, the attraction of the land of the Pharaohs, with its absorbingly interesting ancient history, the opportunities afforded for visiting the pyramids, the complete change of environment afforded by the short transit from West to East; all these things combine to increase the attractions of Cairo.

Naturally, with the influx of invalids, the necessity has arisen for Nursing Homes and Sanatoriums. One of the most recent of these is the Hutchinson Nursing Home, the Matron quarter, all places of amusement can be reached in a few minutes.

There is a Resident Medical Officer who lives in the grounds in a separate house, and who can therefore be quickly in attendance at any time.

The culinary department of the Home is in charge of an Indian cook, and a good Indian cook is second to none in the world. Great attention has been paid to the drainage and sanitation, which are arranged on the latest and most approved English methods.
