At the Annual Meeting of Governors of the Middlesex Hospital last week, Nurse Sarah Cross, who was in Jamaica when the earthquake occurred, and who assisted Dr. Arthur J. Evans in rendering surgical aid to over 200 injured persons on the Port Kingston, was presented by Mr. Henry Morris, F.R.C.S., President of the Royal College of Surgeons, chairman of the meeting, with an illuminated address, which stated that: "Her fortitude and noble devotion signally redound to the honour of the nursing profession, and of British womanhood."

Nurse Cross was cheered to the echo by the students gathered in large numbers in the Board room where the presentation was made, but, save for the presence of the Matron, Miss Vernet, and the Home Sister, no member of her own profession was present. They do things differently where the Nurses have a League connected with their training school. On such occasions the nurses themselves delight to honour their colleagues. After the ceremony, members of the Press who were present were invited to lunch at the hospital.

The report of the Royal Southern Hospital, Liverpool, where 120 cases of tropical diseases were treated in the ward set apart for that purpose, the patients being of many nationalities, states that several nurses sent by the Colonial Office were trained for special hospital work.

A movement is on foot to present Miss Davies, who left the service of St. Bartholomew's Hospital on February 28th, after 35 years of work, with a testimonial in recognition of the appreciation of her work. Miss Davies is better known to many generations of Bart's workers as "Sister Eyes." She will be greatly missed in the hospital where her career has been long and honourable, and she will take with her many good wishes for her future happiness in the period of leisure now before her. Contributions to the testimonial fund will be
