and benefited by her criticism.

The Matrons' Council Meeting on Thursday, April 11th, when Miss Mollett gave an address on the "Twentieth Century Probationer," was a very pleasant one. Miss Isla Stewart, who presided, said Miss Mollett needed no introduction to the Matrons' Council, which had often been charmed by her eloquence

Miss Mollett then, without further preface, gave a most vivacious and illuminating address, which was listened to with the greatest attention and enjoyment by a full room. Miss Mollett's words gained much in interest and spontaneity from being spoken, not read, but as so many country members, who were unable to attend the meeting, have expressed a desire to read the address, Miss Mollett has kindly consented to write it for this journal, and we shall have pleasure in publishing it in our next issue.

During the recent visit of the Dowager Empress of Russia to England she was greatly impressed by the fact that although there were French, Italian, and German hospitals in London, there was not one for Russian subjects.

The Empress, before leaving, said that she would interest herself in collecting subscriptions to found a Russian hospital in the English capital.

Sir Alfred Jones has repeated his contribution of £250 to this year's funds of the Colonial Nursing Association, with a warm expression of his appreciation of the successful work done by the association in providing trained nurses for the British colonies and dependencies and other British communities abroad.

Before the Annual Meeting of the West London Hospital, Hammersmith, which took place last week, the Duke of Abercorn, the President, and his daughter, Lady Alexandra Hamilton, received about 200 guests, many of
