"View Day" at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, which, by time-honoured custom, is always observed on the second Wednesday in May, this year falling on May 8th, is one which is pregnant with memories for all nurses trained in this grand old hospital. Which of them will ever forget her first visit in the early hours of a fair spring morning to Covent Garden Market, a sight which many Londoners miss. They burn the candle too late at the other end, for the most part, to be alert enough to be at the Market by break of day—but it is a sight never forgotten by those who have revelled in its fresh fragrance.

Many years of experience have taught the Sisters and Nurses at Bart's to be judicious buyers, and the wards on View Day present a most charming appearance. Clever brains and deft fingers quickly dispose of the spoils of the early morning to the greatest possible advantage, so that when the Treasurer and Almoners pay their annual official visit in the afternoon, and the patients are in their smartest bed-jackets, the quilts spotless, the wards in apple-pie order, and the nursing staff in the daintiest of washing uniforms, one realises that the lot of the hospital patient of the present day is cast in pleasant places, and the important part of efficient nursing in the treatment of the sick.

The View Day festivities are taking place as we go to press, and an added interest to visitors this year are the new Resident Staff Quarters and Students' Rooms. Let us hope that before long a Nurses' Home worthy of the Hospital will also be on view. The sooner the better.

On Friday, May 10th, the distribution of certificates in cooking to nurses at Charing Cross Hospital will take place, when the Right Hon. the Earl of Kilmorey will preside, and Mr. C. Herman Senn, of the Universal Cookery and Food Association, and others, will speak.
