

fluence, one can hardly doubt, though there is no evidence) the harsh régime was mitigated. Sister Marie Zomak, trained in Berlin, was appointed Directrice, the purple caps were thrown away, the pupils' hair allowed to grow, white linen caps set upon it, and stockings put on their cold bare legs . . . theoretical training was given by Dr. Mut, who not only devoted himself with unselfish energy and without remuneration to his class work, but was also an excellent and successful teacher.

"Such changes could hardly take place in a conservative country without exciting intense disapproval . . . and Sister Marie passed through a difficult time. There we leave her, knowing that progress is an uphill path leading through thorns and over pitfalls."
