

THE HOSPITAL WORLD.

SANATORIUM FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN, BRAMBLEWOOD, HOLT, NORFOLK.

One would have thought that an honourable and busy career of nearly thirty years in a London their reception, and for which she gathered funds was built, and, having seen that through, she turned her attention to private patients and built a house and shelters for them. The picture on this page shows the result, and needless to say Sister Marian has made the house, which stands in a garden of two acres, as charming and attractive as possible. Many nurses will be glad to know that such a Home exists for ladies and children, where they will have the very best of care.

It will be seen that the Sanatorium, as its name implies, stands amongst pines, which are supposed to be specially beneficial to sufferers from pulmonary tuberculosis. It is indeed to the fact of its position, surrounded by these health-giving and beautiful trees, that Bourne-mouth owes its present prosperity. Who knows but that Holt will one day be as rich and as prosperous. At all events, in one corner of it Sister Marian is developing its possibilities, and demonstrating what it can accomplish for sick folk.

Sister Marian writes that she was much amused to read in this JOURNAL of Miss Mollett's experiences in her retirement. She, too, goes in for keeping poultry as well as bees and pigs, and is proud that she bought a small pig for twenty-four shillings a few months ago and has just sold it for £7, but this is an exceptionally good deal. She modestly remarks, "I do not often do as well as this."

Hospital would have satisfied the energies of most people. But those who know Sister Marian Rumball, and her genius for hard work, are not surprised that when she retired to the country it was not to rest on her laurels. Experience had taught her the need of country treatment for tuberculous children, and the difficulty of obtaining it. So she built herself a cottage at Holt in Norfolk and gathered the children round her until such time as the Sanatorium which she planned for
