

mitted to the Executive Committee, while 1,114 cases had been nursed in Edinburgh by the nurses from the training home, involving a total of 31,269 visits.

The movement to establish a King Edward Memorial Home for Nurses in Scotland is, we learn, making satisfactory progress. It will be remembered that at the time of the death of King Edward VII a considerable sum was given and collected by nurses for a memorial committee. The Chairman of the Scottish Committee is Lord Ormidale, and its members include Mr. James D. Hedderwick, Sir Matthew Arthur, Colonel Roxburgh, Miss Gill (Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh), Miss Melrose (Royal Infirmary, Glasgow), Miss Gregory Smith (Western Infirmary, Glasgow), Miss Campbell (Victoria Infirmary, Glasgow), and others, with Mr. R. K. Blair as Hon. Secretary. The Committee have bought two houses at 7 and 9, Chamberlain Road, Edinburgh, and to the late King, and it was the wish of Queen Alexandra that this should be used for the benefit of members of the profession. An English home has been opened at Clapham; and two years ago a committee was formed in Scotland for the purpose of finding suitable premises for retired Scottish nurses, and a sum of £3,000, including the sum collected in Scotland, was handed over by the Central Committee. The Chairman of the Scottish Committee is Lord Ormidale, and its members include Mr. James D. propose to conduct the home on the co-operative principle. Only nurses past active work with an income of £26 per annum will be eligible for admission. The home will be under the direction of a Matron, herself a retired nurse, and it is hoped that ultimately it will be self-supporting. Just now a considerable sum is required to furnish the home, and it is hoped generous donations will be forthcoming.
