THE KING AND HIS ARMY.

The presence of the King with his Army in the field, and His Majesty's visits to the sick and wounded in military hospitals at the seat of war in France, have greatly delighted both officers and men of all ranks. It is now more than 170 years ago since the King of these realms was with his Army on the Continent.

When expressing to the authorities his satisfaction with the efficiency of the hospitals visited, His Majesty graciously added a special word in praise of the nursing staffs.

It will be remembered that Miss Thurstan was accompanied to Charleroi by Miss Elsie Boutle, Miss Grace Broadbury, Miss Astley Campbell, and Miss Esmée Sartorius. These nurses have just returned home after some hairbreadth escapes, having made their way through the German lines disguised as peasants. They left Charleroi on Tuesday, November 24th, arriving in London on the following Saturday. They had plenty of work, lived principally upon black bread baked once in ten days, and seem to have flourished upon it. They are quite ready for active service again as soon as the opportunity offers.
