

CARE OF THE WOUNDED.

The King and Queen have shown their sympathy with the injured in the recent raid by visiting a district which suffered severely and going into some of the damaged houses. Their Majesties express their deepest concern and are taking a personal interest in the relief measures.

Our illustration depicts a scene in a French hospital where wounded soldiers are doing physical exercises so that limbs which have been stiffened by wounds may regain their suppleness. Many ingenious inventions have been devised to restore to the normal state joints and muscles that have been injured in battle, and the exercises shown are directed to this end.

Grand Fleet, was doing in the North Sea—keeping the enemy at bay.

General Zaioutchowsky testifies through the British Admiralty that he has nothing but praise for the Scottish Women's Hospitals, whose motor ambulances were the first thing that he noticed on landing at Brana. And all eye-witnesses agree.

We are indebted to Miss Eileen Cordner for the information that the funeral in Russia depicted in this journal last week was that of a medical woman, not a trained nurse. She writes that Dr. Forster, who contracted influenza and died from heart failure after a week's illness, had undoubtedly overtaxed her strength. She was in the retreat from Antwerp, then went to Russia,

PHYSICAL EXERCISES FOR INJURED AND WOUNDED LIMBS.

At a meeting held last week in Glasgow, when Dr. Louise M'Ilroy and Mrs. Frances Melville, B.D., spoke on the work of the Scottish Women's Hospitals for Foreign Service, Dr. M'Ilroy, the C.M.O. of the Salonica Unit, gave a vivid account of the unit's work in Serbia, and more recently in Salonica, where the hospital has been extended as much as possible to meet emergencies. The whole success of the hospital, she declared, depended on the nursing staff, without whom the doctors could not have kept it running for twenty-four hours. Arrangements were in process for the hospital being moved, and the French had asked them to enlarge it to 500 beds, in order that disabled Serbian soldiers might be taken in and treated. Nobody, she said in conclusion, realised the awfulness of the life our men had to endure out in Macedonia, where they were doing the same thing as the where she worked in Russian hospitals in Petrograd, for over a year. She helped for a short time in a maternity barak in that city, then went with a Russian unit to the Caucasus. After this, she definitely joined the N.U.W.S.S. units working for some months in a large district beyond the Volga; at the end of December, she took up work at Zaleschiky and died on January 29th, Miss Cordner writes:—"She was beloved by all of us nurses, who had the good fortune to work under her."

A new hut of the Surgical Requisites Association Branch of Queen Mary's Needlework Guild, at Mulberry Walk, Chelsea, recently described in this journal, was opened last week by Lady Lawley. The building accommodates about 200 workers employed on a special form of plastic work.
