CARE OF THE WOUNDED.

We are glad to note that the mobile Scottish Women's Hospital Unit which has recently returned from Russia is in process of re-equipment at the request of the War Office, and will, for the future, be known as the "Dr. Elsie Inglis Unit," will rejoin the Serbian Division, will go wherever destiny may direct, and will consist of about twenty-six members, the majority of whom belonged to the original unit. It will be under the command of Dr. Annette Benson, who has come from the Cama Hospital, Bombay, to fill this important post. It is to be a very mobile unit, with tents, its own camp equipment, and full motor transport service.

Miss Mildred Aldrich is still living on her "Hill-top on the Marne," which she wrote about so delightfully that the little volume has gone into many editions. She is now deep in hospital work, and in her lighter moments she is teaching the poilus "The Star Spangled Banner" and "Yankee Doodle," freely translated into French. Also she has finished another book of war experiences, which are certain to be very entrancing.

The Americans have selected splendid sites for four new hospitals they are to erect in up-to-date style.

If London is to remain "a Front," so far as bombs are concerned, it is high time men suffering from shell shock were moved into quiet country districts. After some useful agitation in the Press—proving how terribly such invalids suffer from the sound of the barrage—an effort is now being made to remove these cases from London. The good work should be expedited.
