

Do Scientific Methods of Fuel Utilisation Pay?

UNDOUBTEDLY they do, in every direction. A factory in war-time does not increase its annual consumption of gas from four million to fourteen million cubic feet—another from three million to fifteen million—a third from one million to forty million—unless there is profit in it for the individual firm.

At the same time the nation benefits when gas is used instead of coal—by the decreased drain on its not inexhaustible coalfields, and by the production of dyes, drugs, explosives, fertilisers, and other valuable substances lost when crude coal is consumed.
