OUTSIDE THE GATES.

July 25th, the day of the Indian Empire in Women's Week at Wembley, was a great success, and the gracious message sent by the Queen, and read by Princess Helena Victoria, was received with great enthusiasm.

HER MAJESTY'S MESSAGE TO THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

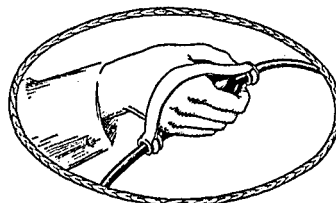

"My two visits to India have left me with very vivid and happy memories of the women of that vast and varied continent; memories of their dignity, kindness, and simplicity. They are constantly in my thoughts, and their well-being very near my heart. Twice I have sent them messages regarding women's noblest sphere—the home. It is the home which makes the nation and which builds the Empire. The future of India demands healthy, vigorous children, with strong, sane outlook and wholesome ideals. In no part of the world is the home more sacred and more fraught with possibilities than in India, for love of home and devotion to family form the ruling motive of life.

"In no part of the world, in my opinion, is women's power greater. It may be unseen, behind the veil, but it is there, and a glorious and golden field is ready for those of our sisters who will devote themselves to social work. Since old custom is strong and stubborn, such work is always difficult. It calls for patience and the gentle consideration of the little cares of life. The results may not be immediate, but they are certain; and remember that it is by this work—the work of women rather than of men—that the peoples of India will win proud and equal rank among the self-respecting nations of the world. You can all serve in the splendid cause of social welfare. Personal service does more and counts more than gifts of money. Begin with your home, since example, with gentle persuasion, can win everything."

Lady Cowasjee Jehangir, a member of the Parsee Community, said that India was awakening from the dreamy sleep of long years. It was her purpose to mould her men so to realise their manhood that the glory of India should not be a tradition of bygone years, but a living reality to-day.

THE SECURITY GRIP ENEMA.

We have pleasure in drawing attention to the "Security Grip Enema," a syringe supplied by the Surgical Manufacturing Co., Ltd., 83-85, Mortimer Street, London, W.1, which has many advantages over most ordinary syringes on the market. It is an invention of an eminent London Doctor, and, we are informed, has received the approval of numerous medical practitioners and nurses.

The Security Grip Enema Syringe.

In the present type of enema syringe, operated by means of a compressible bulb, there is always a possibility of the bulb being accidentally released. This disadvantage is entirely overcome by means of a SECURITY STRAP fitted over the bulb of the syringe, thus retaining the grasp of the user when compressing the bulb, and giving mechanical leverage during manipulation.

Other advantages are that it allows the manipulator more freedom of the hand, and also serves as a loop for hanging up the syringe after use, an advantage which will be much appreciated by nurses.

The syringe may be obtained in either black or red enamelled rubber, or in velvet finish, also in sterilizable rubber supplied complete in box. We commend the syringe, the moderate price of which is 4s., to the notice of our readers.
