

On the one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the Medical Society of London, writes The Times of May 4th, "Sir James Crichton Browne took as his subject the extent to which difference of sex should call for difference in education. . . . Upon the grounds of different weight, different complexity of structure, different specific gravity, and a different arrangement of blood-supply, Sir James arrives at the conclusion that the male and female brains are organs broadly distinguished from each other, and having, to some extent, different work to do. . . . It goes without saying that a few women have possessed distinctively masculine mental endowments, and a few men distinctively feminine ones; but the government of States and the control of education are not things the conduct of which can be usefully or profitably based upon exceptions, however brilliant they may be."

Chopping wood with a razor, and shaving with a hatchet are laborious, even dangerous tasks. The razor and the hatchet may be most excellent and useful tools, each in its way and used in the manner its maker intended, but reverse and exchange the work you consign to them, and the chances are ten to one they will cut your fingers, or even your throat.

Inventions, Preparations, &c.

THE EUCALYPT AUTOMATIC VAPORISER (Messrs.

Coxeter and Co., Grafton Street, Euston Road, N.W.)—This is an exceedingly useful and ingeniously arranged article. Dr. Spencer, the inventor, uses oil of eucalyptus, with ten per cent. of camphor, and finds that this answers admirably for the purpose for which it is intended. The manufacturers are about to bring out a cheaper form, which will retail at ten shillings and sixpence. This vaporiser will prove valuable in a variety of ways. In general disinfection it might be placed in the centre of the room, according to the size of which a larger or smaller amount of vapour might be supplied.
