We always feel honoured to receive a cordial invitation from the Trustees and Officers of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, at Baltimore, to attend the Graduating Exercises of the Annual Class.

Nothing can efface from memory the three wonderful days we spent there in 1892, with Isabel Hampton and Lavinia Dock, before the American Nursing world had taken the first steps towards national organisation, which now through the American Nurses' Association has united for professional purposes the nurses in every State in the Union.

the more she is called on to do, the more these humanities flower forth.

"There is a lift, of course, in the job itself that helps carry the nurse along. Her work is never a monotonous round. She can count on change, variety, plenty of 'human interest' in her days. Almost every case is a challenge to her to do her job in a new way. Out of her day's work the nurse gains the strength that comes from the dependence of others upon her; she has, too, the frequent satisfaction of seeing accomplishment flow indirectly from her effort.

"In spite of the long hours, exacting toil and mounting demands upon her, the physical and emotional strain, the visiting nurse—if she is qualified by aptitude and intelligence and devotion—will not falter. She knows that she is needed, she knows that her work is good, and out of this faith she seems to renew her strength."

FLORAL TRIBUTES IN HONOUR OF SISTER DORA'S BIRTHDAY.

What a beneficent revolution in forty years! And how fine to have lived to see it. When we met Miss Lawley the present Superintendent of Nurses at Johns Hopkins, in Geneva last year, she confessed she had the "International Council habit and followed it around."

Good for the International Council. We hope she will be with us in Paris-Brussels in July.

Miss Lillian D. Wald, Founder of the Visiting Nurse Service, Henry Street Settlement, New York, writes in the Survey :—

"There is a sense of dedication about the women who make good as public health nurses. They literally forget themselves. They tap sources of strength on which dedicated souls of all ages have drawn. They have, too, a sense of identity with the family problem, a moral responsibility for bringing it through to some sort of workable solution. You see the same thing in the way a good mother lifts and carries her family load :

Miss Le Geyt sends us a copy of the Bath Chronicle, which contains a delightful picture of the laying of the foundation stone of the new operating Theatre at the Orthopædic Hospital at Bath. This ceremony is being jointly performed by the senior surgeon, Mr. W. G. Mumford, and Sister J. E. Jones. "It struck me as a unique and pleasant recognition of the services of the Nursing Profession, and therefore I knew it could not fail to interest you," writes Miss Le Geyt. It interests us greatly. Colleagues for the benefit of mankind.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint a long list of Queen's Nurses for service in District Nursing, in England and Wales, Scotland, the Irish Free State and in Northern Ireland. This is a service in which Nurses enjoy their true vocation, and in which their work is of real national value. We are glad to note its popularity. The Queen's interest in this branch of nursing is very inspiring.
