Home the hospital does not lose track of its patients, for they attend one of the many clinics run by the hospital

all over the South of England.

As the hospital buildings are dispersed over an area of one hundred and eight acres there is ample room for expansion and for playground. A well-made road links the different parts of the hospital. A large garden grows practically all the vegetables required. There is also a farm, but this cannot supply nearly enough milk. The ground on which the hospital is situated slopes away to the North where, on a clear day, the Tower of St. Albans Cathedral can be seen in the distance. The upper hillside is dotted with gorse bushes but below we saw fields with sheep and young lambs which are the joy of the little convalescents. In the flower beds which flank the wards the crocus was in bloom in spite of the snow which lay on the hill slope and the daffodil buds were already flushed with yellow. A rose garden gave promise of summer glory and everywhere Nature spread freely her beauty and healing inspiration.

LEPROSY A PROBLEM OF COLONIAL DEVELOPMENT.

The annual report of the British Empire Leprosy Relief Association shows that when the association was founded in 1924 the chief emphasis was laid upon treatment.

While treatment still holds an important place in the programme, even more prominence has to be given to isolation, and especially to the prevention of infective lepers coming in contact with young children. Without effective isolation of all—or at least the great majority of the dangerous lepers, there is little hope of controlling and curtailing the disease, which is estimated to have a hold upon no fewer than 2,000,000 sufferers within the Empire.

The leper settlements are being used as centres of education and of the training of the more intelligent patients in anti-leprosy work during the years they are under treatment, so that when they recover and return home they may assist in this crusade of enlightenment and health. Much valuable work on these lines is being done by partly trained Toc H men sent out to the leper settlements. It is stated that if more money were available much more could be done along such lines. There are Toc H men willing to volunteer for the work, but the money required, some £250 a year for each man, is not yet forthcoming. The special Toc H committee to raise money for such volunteers has now been amalgamated with the executive committee of B.E.L.R.A., and the association has been incorporated by the Board of Trade as a "company limited by guarantee."

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF ST. JOHN AMBULANCE BRIGADE.

The St. John Ambulance Brigade will celebrate its Jubilee this year immediately after the Coronation, beginning with a reception at St. John's Gate on Friday, May 14th.

The Brigade, which was formed in 1887, has now grown to a strength of 101,917 men, women, and cadets in this country and overseas, from where many will be making long journeys to attend both the Jubilee Celebrations and the Coronation. Representatives will come from Hong Kong, Australia, Canada, Zanzibar, India, S. Africa and other parts of the British Empire.

Her Majesty the Queen, the Commandant-in-Chief of the Nursing Corps and Divisions, will take part in the Jubilee Celebrations by reviewing the Brigade in Hyde Park on Saturday, May 22nd.
